

Point of view

By Marilyn & Jenny

1st Person

- ❖ The Grammatical person used by the speaker referring to himself/herself or to a group in which it includes himself/herself.

3rd Omniscient, limited, objective

- ❖ Omniscient: narrator knows the thoughts and feelings about all the characters in the story.
- ❖ Limited: narrator only knows the thoughts and feeling of a single character.
- ❖ Objective: narrator doesn't know the characters thoughts or feelings

Why Authors use point of view?

Authors use point of view in first and third person because they would like to make the characters seem more realistic and that their words would make you imagine how people/places may look like in the story in the readers mind.

Examples of Third Person

Omniscient: "Hello, my dear. Come closer." The Wolf patted the bedspread beside him. The girl needed to be closer so she couldn't avoid the attack. The wolf's mouth watered in anticipation of this juicy snack.

Objective: "Hello, my dear. Come closer." Grandma patted the bedspread beside her.

Limited: Grandma patted the bedspread beside her and was thinking of making cookies.

Examples of First Person

I am really scared of spiders.

We like the twilight movie series and we are in the Jacob team.

My dog fell asleep.

discover that what I have to say is legitimate, exciting, and important? I think probably the best way to make my papers more interesting is by focusing on the way I present my information. How can I make my writing more fun? There are lots of ways, and I'm just beginning to learn.

My personal essay should talk about me. It shouldn't involve an objective point of view. Instead, it should focus on what I think and feel, what my hopes are.

Quiz ^~^

- ❖ we watched the whole series of twilight.
- ❖ Vanessa felt like she was going to fall.
- ❖ Students register for college classes in early August.
- ❖ The group attended to the meeting.
- ❖ Xavier wants a hawaiian pizza.
- ❖ Veronica shook her head slowly. Her heart was breaking at having to tell him this news.
- ❖ Bianca was excited to meet Andy, but Andy was nervous to meet Bianca.